

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL

October.

The days are still, and the long nights
And the far sky burns like the heart of a rose;
And the woods with the gold of autumn
flushed,
Lavish their splendor in crimson snows.

The quail pipes shrilly, the robin sings
A sweet, low song of a southern wind
At early morn, when in delicate rings
The mists from the marshes are upward curled.

The school boys shout on the windy hill,
Where nuts lie thick in the matted
grass;
And the maidens, who trip by the moss-
grown mill,
Sweetly sing as they lightly pass.

The world is caught in a wonderful net
Of beauty, tremulous golden haze,
And is laid asleep to dream and forget
That winter cometh and stormy days
—Selected.

Beacon Lights.

Let autumn's weary footsteps stray,
From paths she long has trod,
The beacon lights mark out the way
In torch-like golden-rod.
Henry Cleveland Wood.

The summer comes and the summer
goes;
Wild flowers are fringing the dusty lanes;
The swallows go fringing through fragrant
rales,
Then, all of a sudden—it snows.
—T. B. Aldrich.

When Death to Either Shall Come.

By ROBERT BRIDGES.

Robert Seymour Bridges was born in 1874, was educated at Eton and Oxford, practised medicine in London till 1882, and besides volumes of poetry has written classical plays.

WHEN Death to either shall come—
I pray it be first to me—
Be happy as ever at home,
If so, as I wish, it be.

Possess thy heart, my own;
And sing to the child on thy knee,
Or read to thyself alone
The songs that I made for thee.
